Robert and Virginia Richter have been the co-Digital Directors of the f:67 Camera Club since April 2010.

Robert (Bob) grew up in Seattle, graduated from Garfield High School and attended Seattle University. Bob's parents operated a print shop on the lower floor of the Pike Place Market. Bob became interested in mechanics and electronics at an early age. He loves to take things apart and find out how they work. He worked as an outboard and stern drive mechanic at dealerships in Seattle and Edmonds. After returning to Seattle University and earning a degree in vocational rehabilitation, he worked as a substitute vocational instructor and teacher's aide.

Bob also became interested in photography early in life. He took photographs for the student newspaper at Seattle University. He is interested in most types of photography—he is planning on trying macro photography—and experimenting with different developer formulas for black and white and color film.

Virginia lived in Kent, Washington as a child and in Ogden, Utah as a teenager. She graduated from the University of Washington, planning to become a math teacher. After teaching for a year in junior high school, she decided to try a different career path. She found a job with a Seattle consulting firm, performing financial calculations for insurance and pension plans, and helping develop and test computer software. She plans to retire soon after close to 40 years of service. Her hobbies include playing the violin and viola in various musical groups. She currently volunteers as an AARP Tax Aide. Virginia likes to take pictures of scenery, natural phenomena and architecture.

Bob and Virginia have lived in Kitsap County since 1990. In 2008 Bob volunteered for a youth Photo Voice program in Suquamish. There he met Doug Swank, who invited Bob and Virginia to visit the f:67 Camera Club. They were impressed with the friendliness of the members and enjoyed seeing the photographic work, so they decided to join the club.
